The Euroregional Center for Democracy (CED) is a non-governmental, non-profit organisation, founded on December 16, 1999 by the Open Society Foundation - Romania. The Center promotes democracy and stability in Central and South-Eastern Europe.

CED is located in Timișoara, a city in the Western part of Romania. Timișoara represents an ideal learning location for a laboratory seeking to devise programs of great importance for the future of democracy and regional stability. This multi-ethnic and multi-cultural space encourages the dialogue between actors that promote democratic values.

Objectives

- To build and consolidate democracy

by providing innovative ongoing and long-term opportunities for communication through interactive seminars, workshops, panels, in order to help democratic institutions

- To promote partnership between regional, national and local non-governmental organizations and institutions and help them develop regional projects, as well as undertake joint efforts

- To strengthen the institutional capacity of the NGO community through programs that ensure the development of available human resources, as well as of the organizational, institutional and legal framework in order to facilitate the elaboration of long-term strategies for viability and sustainability

- To raise regional community awareness of common transition-related issues and of the relationship between diversity and democracy by initiating debates on contentious issues in order to overcome prejudices, stereotypes and isolation.

Program implementation

Areas of activity

I. Regional cross-border cooperation

II. Education for democracy

III. Advocacy

In 2006, CED continued its support to strengthen the third sector from South Eastern Europe, by providing programs that addressed civil society organisations (CSOs) from Romania, Republic of Moldova, Ukraine and Bulgaria. The objective was to give them opportunities to build and develop their capacities to plan their sustainability, work in networks and coalitions, elaborate advocacy campaigns or work with public institutions in the process of elaborating decisions and preventing corruptive practices.

Also, CED promoted mechanisms of communication between citizens and structures representing them and the local administration from Timișoara and Arad (web page, newspaper column, radio shows, phone line) and trained them on laws regarding access to public information, transparency of decision and how to influence the decision making process.

Students and youth organisations from Timișoara were trained in leadership, advocacy, negotiation and conflict management, during CED's first initiative of the campaign for transparency in higher education launched in 2005, aimed at strengthening students' and youth organisations' role to ensure transparency and involving them in preventing and fighting acts of corruption.

SMEs from Făget and Szentes were enabled to develop and implement cross-border businesses, a step forward in CED's support to create regional networks among cross-border actors (NGOs, public institutions, SMEs).

Several studies have been elaborated, on subjects concerning CED's areas of activity :

- A comparative evaluation of the third sector from Romania, Republic of Moldova and Ukraine regarding its involvement in the public policies making process
- Identifying main problems citizens from Timișoara are confronted with in their relation with the local public administration and supporting them in their approach and involvement in local authorities' activities and decision making process
- Mapping the full dimension of corruption, its forms, mechanisms and consequences in public state-funded universities from Timișoara University Center
- Identifying the similarities and differences between the Romanian and Bulgarian CSOs who offer social services, legislation in the field and types of services provided.

Web pages were created as means of information and communication for and between the target groups:

- www.ecomunicare.ro
- www.ccc.ecomunicare.ro
- www.integritate.ro
